Having for a long time suffered from the effects of a horrible blood trouble, and after resorting to medical skill and other remedies without benefit, I tried "A. B. C. Alterative." A Young Widow's Revenge
A letter was had before Justice J. R. Devaney of Ellenville, N.Y., on Friday last in a case in which Isaac N. Cox, the principal merchant of the town and the Congress-malefactor of the United States, pays a conspicuous part. Mr. Cox, who is past middle age, married a young Sullivan county belle about two years ago, brought her to Ellenville and established her in a handsome mansion. The bride and groom began keeping by a grand reception of their friends from far and near. After dark, and while the festivities were in progress, some malicious person smeared the gateway and the walk leading to the mansion and the porch with a compound of fish oil and lamp black, to the ruin of the dresses of the lady guests and of the costly carpets and other furniture in the house. On several occasions since then acts of malicious mischief of a similar character have been perpetrated on the premises, but, strange to say, no earnest effort has been made until very recently toward detecting and punishing the offender.

It was recalled by the gossip that for ten or twelve years before his marriage Mr. Cox had paid marked attention to Mrs. Sarah Melville, an attractive widow of the village, and it was thought they were engaged to be married. People talked of the annoyances of which Mr. Cox was the victim as the revenge of a jilted woman, and there was little feeling of surprise when, on the night of Oct. 11th last, it was announced that the widow Melville had been caught in the very act of smearing the approach to the Cox mansion.

The hearing before Justice Devaney on Friday was on a complaint for alleged assault and battery made by the widow Melville against James J. Thorp. The complainant testified that on the night named, while she was passing along the street in front of the Cox mansion, the defendant seized her violently and dragged her into the dooryard, pinching her arms black and blue, and shocking her nervous system. She deposed that on that or any other occasion she had committed any malicious mischief of the character indicated on the premises.

The defendant testified that on the night in question he was employed by Mr. Cox to watch the house, and that he caught Mrs. Melville in the act of smearing a compound on the walk leading from the gateway to the porch. He produced an old tomato can in court, which, he alleged, the widow used in the operation. Mrs. Cox corroborated him by testifying that she saw and identified Mrs. Melville as the person captured by Thorp.

Will Wed a King.
In Loudoun county, Virginia, not very far from Washington, there is a girl who will some day contract an alliance with a King. Her dress on that occasion will not be particularly splendid, and for that reason, perhaps, the event has not attracted the attention that such marriages usually do. The truth is the girl is a regess, and the man she will marry is King of a tribe in Africa. She is at present being trained for her future position in African court circles, and is an inmate of the family of the Rev. John Chester, a clergyman who several years ago was a missionary to the western coast of Africa. His wife became very fond of a young African girl while he was there, and asked permission that she return with them when they left the Dark Continent. Her father thinking the missionary was joking, gave his consent, but when the time came for parting wanted to be released from his promise. Chester still persisted in his request, and finally, as no member of the tribe is allowed under pain of death to break a promise, he had to allow his daughter to depart. The child was given the English name of Nellie instead of the unpronounceable one she at first possessed, and although Chester already had children of his own she was treated as a member of the family. Since Nellie has been in the United States she has made great progress in her education, and now at the age of 15 is a model of scholarship and politeness. She can speak French and English well and combines the winning ways of an American girl with the politeness of a Parisian. Nellie looks much older than she really is and would be eligible to marriage if she were with her own tribe. Since they came here the Chesters have kept up a correspondence with the parents of the girl, who have been delighted with the progress which they have learned that she is making under her instructors. About a month ago they received a letter from her father asking that she be returned to Africa, as the King wished to claim his bride. The tribe of which she is a member is a polygamous one, and Chester refused to do this unless the girl was to be the King's only Queen. The King, who is charmed with the stories about Nellie, has promised to be asked, and it is likely that within a few months Nellie will be sent back to mount a throne in her native land. She has had several offers of marriage from negroes living near her home, but she has refused them all, and the King will find her heart whole and fancy free. African-like, she does not care much for sentiment, and seems perfectly content to wait a man many years her senior and whom she has not seen since she was a very small child. —Chicago Herald
